Part III DETAILED ACTION

1. The abstract of the disclosure is objected to because it is not drawn to the claimed invention. Correction is required. See MPEP § 608.01(b).

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 102

The following is a quotation of the appropriate paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 102 that form the basis for the rejections under this section made in this Office action:

A person shall be entitled to a patent unless –

(e) the invention was described in (1) an application for patent, published under section 122(b), by another filed in the United States before the invention by the applicant for patent or (2) a patent granted on an application for patent by another filed in the United States before the invention by the applicant for patent, except that an international application filed under the treaty defined in section 351(a) shall have the effects for purposes of this subsection of an application filed in the United States only if the international application designated the United States and was published under Article 21(2) of such treaty in the English language.

2. Claims 1-9 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(e) as being anticipated by Miyake (6,188,490).

With regard to claim 1, Miyake teaches a computer-implemented method for filling an aggregate print job layout having a plurality of printing positions, the layout intended to be printed in a print run quantity (e.g. figs 2-6), the method comprising a) storing individual print jobs, (reads on fig. 4, jobs stored as items 1,2,4, 9 or 16),
b) for each individual print job, storing an associated print quantity (see figs. 2 and 4),
c) retrieving an individual print job having an associated print quantity that is substantially equal to or a multiple of the print run quantity from the stored individual print jobs for incorporation into the aggregate print job layout (see figs. 2a-2e),

d) if the print quantity associated with the retrieve individual print job is substantially equal to the print run quantity, assigning the selected individual print job to one position in the aggregate print job layout (reads on jobs that have 1,2,4,9 or 16 pages within the print job layout as suggested by figs. 2a-2e and fig. 4)

e) if the print quantity associated with the retrieved individual print job is substantially equal to a multiple of the print run quantity (as suggested by fig. 4), assigning the selected individual print job to that multiple number of positions in the aggregate print job layout (reads on the number of jobs that can be fixed within a print run as suggested by fig. 4, one print job can fit in a page where two jobs can be printed).

With regard to claim 2, Miyake further teaches repeating steps c-e until the layout filling process is completed (reads on figs. 2a-2e, which depicts how the pages can be filled by having different number of pages within the printing of the page repeating the steps above).

With regard to claim 3, Miyake further teaches wherein the layout filling process is completed when all printing positions in the layout have been filled (see figs. 2a-2e, pages are filled with different layout).

With regard to claim 4, Miyake further teaches wherein the layout filling process is completed when no individual print job having an associated print quantity that is substantially equal to or a multiple of the print run quantity is available at step c (reads on figs. 2a-2e, and col. 2, lines 4-11).

With regard to claim 5, Miyake further teaches wherein the individual print jobs are received electronically (reads on fig. 1, which depicts how a user can file a print job electronically using a host computer).

With regard to claim 6, Miyake further teaches wherein the individual print jobs are received over a computer network (see col. 1, lines 15-17, clearly this method can be implemented over network printing system).

With regard to claim 7, the limitations of claims 7 are covered by the limitations of claim 1 above; and Miyake further teaches wherein the print job quantities being different and assigning position to individual print jobs (see figs. 2a-2e).

With regard to claims 8 and 9, the limitations of claims 8 and 9 are covered by the limitations of claims 1 and 7 above.

3. The prior art made of record and not relied upon is considered pertinent to applicant's disclosure.

Zandi et al. (5,731,988) teaches a method and apparatus for reversible color conversion.
